

The Brooklyn Waterfront Research Center (BWRC) presents

Brooklyn's Urban Farms: Production and Education

Although the current urban farming movement predates its arrival in Brooklyn, some of the most innovative and dynamic urban farming is being done in that borough. While urban farms address issues of sustainability, nutrition, and “food deserts,” they have always had an educational component.

BWRC's first breakfast event of the spring semester will be a panel discussion on urban farms along the Brooklyn waterfront. The panelists will include urban farmers and educators: Ben Flanner of the Brooklyn Grange, Mara Gittleman of Kingsborough Community College Urban Farm, and Mark Hellermann and Diana Mincyte of New York City College of Technology.

Date: Friday, February 19, 2016

Time: 8:30am -10:00am

Place: New York City College of Technology, 300 Jay Street, Brooklyn, NY

Room: Atrium 632