

The Brooklyn Waterfront Research Center (BWRC) presents:

“Shooting” the Brooklyn Waterfront: Two Photographers Talk About Their Work

Nathan Kensinger is a photographer, filmmaker, artist, and curator based in Brooklyn, New York. He has been documenting New York City’s changing waterfront in an ongoing series of photo essays which have been featured by the New York Times, New York Magazine, Village Voice and Curbed NY.

Robin Michals is a photographer whose work considers the built environment with a focus on the de-industrialized urban waterfront. Since 2010, she has been developing Castles Made of Sand, a series about the low-lying areas around New York City, New Orleans, and cities in the Pearl River Delta in China that are affected by sea level rise.
